I just recently wrote an article about how travel leads to consuming so many fabulous food and drink offerings that your expanding buttocks can't begin to compete, especially if exercise is the last thing on your mind. A marathon sounds like a pretty good way to work off some weight. Maybe I should start running more. And sign up for a marathon.

Wait.

Here's the perfect one.

Savannah, Georgia is sponsoring their first annual Beerathon. After phenomenal success (really? Are you surprised?) in other cities like Houston and New York, this is a marathon for those of us who consider a run to be nothing more than a beer run. Beer bands, DJ's and fun will make this an event to remember.

The event will take place on November 10, 2012 with check-in from noon to 3:00. Registration is online and you have choices about where you pick up your passes for the Beerathon. There will be no tickets sold at the event so make sure you register online.

For your online registration, you get to try 26 beers at 26 different and equally fabulous locations. There will be entertainment along the way and each venue will offer a specially selected beer to the participants. Designated drivers are strongly encouraged at the end of the Beerathon – an idea I emphatically support.

There are no prizes involved but look at this way – everyone is a winner because seriously? 26 beers? How cool is that?

The Beerathon will take place all over Savannah and has been designed by some experts in both consuming beer and having fun.

Don't you want to meet those guys? What a great job.
